It took eight ballots to decide the matter. The permanent officers of the Convention were W. J. Husem of Newport Chairman, and Messrs. T. J. Young of Owensboro and J. T. Wilson of Cynthiana Secretaries.

On the call for nominations the names of eleven men were put before the Convention, but from the first it looked as though the Wood delegation had the best of affairs.

After Mr. Wood's nomination some of the defeated candidates addressed the meeting, pleading their support to nomination.

The Convention also adopted resolutions endorsing the administration of President McKinley and Governor Bradley, and endorsing Civil Service.

The accounts believed that rheumatism was the work of a demon within a man.
